You told me not to organise anything, and here you are, blowing out the candles with your "I can't believe this" face. Thirty years as my big sister and you still never see a surprise coming. Thank you for teaching me to lose at Mario Kart with dignity. Love you, pest.

Lucy Reed

Here's to the one who remembers everyone's birthday and never misses a single one. Fifteen years of late-night snacks, concerts and early starts. Thirty looks great on you; the party hats, less so. Here's to many more!

Paul Wright

“

You promised us cake and you were first in line for it. Thank you for covering my shift when I needed it and for making Mondays bearable. Have the happiest birthday, and may there be no meetings tomorrow.

Ellie Turner

Thirty already, kiddo. Feels like yesterday I was teaching you to ride a bike. A big hug from your uncle, who isn't one for long messages.

Uncle Frank

While we were planning this, you texted me four times asking what we were doing on Saturday. We have never lied so badly. Thank you for the laughs, the 2 a.m. confessions and for always telling me I've forgotten my keys. You're one of the good ones.

Martha Green

DEDICATION

When you were born you weighed seven and a half pounds and you were already making noise. Now you're thirty and still so easy to love. Eat well, wrap up warm and call your grandma on Sundays. A big kiss, sweetheart.

Grandma Pat

You asked for room in our fridge “for a little something” and we suspected right away. The cake slept in our kitchen from Wednesday, and we'll keep the look on your face when it came out with the candles. Happy birthday, neighbour.

Dan & Naomi

DEDICATION

Thirty years old and you still haven't beaten me in a match, but I forgive you because the drinks afterwards are on you. I clapped more today than all season. Happy birthday, champ. Court's booked for Thursday at eight.

Ryan Nash

Ever since we swapped Statistics notes, I've laughed with you more than with anyone. Today we couldn't help ourselves and all piled on top of you. Thank you for being the kindest person I know. Thirty, and on to forty!

Isabel Price

We fired the confetti like we'd won the championship. It's the only trophy we're lifting this quarter. Julia, thank you for explaining the impossible in three sentences and for bringing doughnuts on Fridays. Happy birthday from all of us.

The Product team

“

Sweetheart, thirty years ago you made me the happiest and most tired woman in the world. I'm so proud to see you like this, surrounded by people who love you. Promise me you'll keep calling on Sundays and eating something other than pasta. I love you so much.

Carol Reed

“

Thirty years and you're still my greatest pride. Happy birthday, love. Now blow out the candles before the cake's gone.

Tony Reed

“

I couldn't make it from London, but I've asked everyone to tell me all about it. Five years away and you're still the one who texts me most. When I'm back at Christmas, the first round is on me. Happy birthday, Julia!

Laura Vance

“

As kids we played at being grown-ups on the front steps. Well, now we are, and we still play the same game. Thank you for twenty years of friendship and for never introducing us as “the ones downstairs”.

Vic & Anna

Three years sharing a flat and I've never once picked up your socks, because you always do it yourself. We used the candle moment to take the selfie of the year. You're the best flatmate anyone could have, even if you ate my yogurt yesterday. Forgiven, it's your birthday.

Nora Collins

“

I'm two years ahead of you, so I can tell you: thirty suits you. You'll see, the best is still to come. Happy birthday, cuz. Next barbecue's at mine.

Hugh Reed

“

At your christening I promised myself I'd look after you. Today you're the one looking after everyone. I'm so proud of the woman you've become. A huge kiss, and you know there's always a bed, and a home-cooked dinner, at mine.

Aunt Lucy

“

Since you left, Fridays don't smell of doughnuts anymore. Come and see us soon. Happy birthday, Julia; may thirty suit you as well as the best coffee from the machine. A hug from the old gang.

Sophie Lane

“

We said we'd be millionaires by thirty. Still waiting. In the meantime I've owed you twenty bucks since 2017, and today, with everyone watching, I admit it. Happy birthday, partner.

Alex Ortiz

“

We run together on Saturdays and you always finish last with a smile. Today we all crossed the line together, which is what matters. Happy birthday, and see you at the park gates.

Tess Gomez

“

Turning thirty with a backpack on: the April trail is booked. We agreed the cake made up for the climb. Thank you for always packing the extra sandwich. Have the happiest birthday!

The hiking crew

“

Five years ago I hired you for the way you explained things, and you've exceeded everything I hoped for. Thank you for the great ideas, and for the ones that didn't work out, which taught us something too. Happy birthday, and onwards.

Mark Duarte

“

In Bologna you made the best pasta in the world and taught me how to live away from home. Sometimes I think that was the best year of my life, and you were in it. Happy birthday, sending you the biggest hug.

Bea Salas

Thirty years, and I'm the lucky one who found you at just the right time. You nearly put your nose in the cake laughing, and I never want to forget that laugh. Thank you for putting up with my mess and for the coffee every morning. Happy birthday, my love.

Thank you for being part of this memory.
